Relevant to mental disorder any clinically significant behavioral or psychological syndrome characterized by distressing symptoms, significant impairment of functioning, or increases Mental disorders are assumed to result from a behavioral, psychological or biological dysfunction in the individual. The concept does not include deviant behaviour, disorders that are essentially conflicts between the individual and society, or expected and culturally sanctioned responses to particular events. Mental Warming Less than the average of the general intellectual functioning which brings with it some degree of impaired adaptation in learning, social regulation or maturation or in all three areas; It is now classified as a developmental disability. Checking delay is a relative term. Its meaning depends on what society requires the individual in learning, ability and social responsibility. Many people who are considered simultaneously challenged in the complex modern world would normally get along in a simpler society. Diagnosis: There is no absolute measure for the delay. At one time the different types were classified only according to the apparent severity of the delay. Since the most practical standard was intelligence, the degree of delay was based on the patient's score on intelligence tests such as the intelligence quotient (IQ). The average person is considered to have an IQ between 90 and 110, and those who score below 70 are considered mentally retarded. In the past, the different groupings have been classified in terms such as weakened, idiot, Imbecille and Moron. Today, most healthcare providers use the following classifications: for IQs from 50 to 70, mild; 35 to 50, moderate; 20 to 35, severe; under 20, deep. Classifications are used, it is agreed that IQ measurements are only a part of the factors to be considered in determining mental retardation. Others, such as the patient's adaptability to the environment, the services and training available, and the amount of control shown over their emotions, are also very important. Even 85% of patients considered to be mentally retarded are the least severe, or delicate, group. Those in this group usually do not have obvious physical defects and therefore are not always easy to identify as mentally retarded while still infants. Sometimes the mental defects of a child do not arise until the time of entering school, when the child has difficulty learning and keeping up with others in the same age. Many people who are in the mid category, as adults Finding a job or a place in the company suitable for their abilities, so that they are no longer identified as mentally delayed. Cause: the cause of mental retardation is often often known ones are classified as genetics or acquired. Genetic pathologies include chromosomal abnormalities such as Down syndrome and Klinefelter syndrome and metabolism errors such as phenylketonuria, hypothyroidism and tay-sachs. The conditions acquired may be prenatal, perinatal or postnatal. Prenatal pathologies include rosolia and other viral infections, toxins, placental failure and incompatibility with the blood group. Perinatal causes are anxiety, childbirth injuries and prematurity. Postnatal causes may include infections, poisons, bad nutrition, traumas and sociocultural factors such as deprivation. Many pathologies that can cause serious delays can be diagnosed during pregnancy and in some cases proper treatment can reduce or even prevent delay. The proper care for the mother during pregnancy and for the child in the first months of life is also important.
